

MEMORANDUM

To Dr. Tim Mills

Superintendent, Bellevue School District

From Rob McKenna and Brian Moran

DATE July 29, 2016

RE Review of the Washington Interscholastic Activities Association (WIAA) Report and

KingCo Principal Executive Board (KPEB) Decision

I. Summary

This memorandum discusses (1) how the WIAA investigators' approach to the investigation produced a skewed report; (2) how the KPEB's Decision has given unjustified credence to the WIAA Report as the definitive take on the investigation; and (3) why the investigators' and KPEB's allegations that Bellevue School District (BSD) administrators somehow obstructed the investigation and did not adequately cooperate with it are not supported by evidence either within or outside the Report or Decision.

II. Independent Review of the WIAA Report

We reviewed the WIAA Report, dated March 22, 2016. We also reviewed thousands of pages of documents that the BSD produced upon WIAA's request, along with other relevant materials such as hundreds of emails between BSD and the investigators.

Our review assessed the WIAA investigators' claims that BSD administrators did not cooperate with the WIAA investigation and, at times, interfered with or obstructed it. We find these claims of BSD obstruction and inadequate cooperation to be inaccurate and unfair but, unfortunately, they are repeated by KPEB in its Decision without any independent verification or analysis of the claims.

For reference, we attach an index which categorizes and summarizes allegations that the investigators made in the WIAA Report. In the same index, we comment on each allegation and provide alternative considerations. Reading the Report alongside (1) the underlying evidence; (2) ongoing extensive communications from the investigation; and (3) the guidelines provided for WIAA investigations, our view is that the investigators assumed an advocacy role when they should have maintained one of a neutral fact-finder. We also conclude that any objective, thorough review of the Report's evidence and of the BSD administrators' communications with the investigators

Yet another example involves the investigators insisting on interviewing all physical education teachers. Since the investigators had provided no reason for the need to disrupt so many teachers, none of whom likely had any relevant information, Mr. Harrison suggested that the investigators pick one physical education teacher to interview. The investigators called Mr. Harrison's suggestion "interference."

The Report enshrines the investigators' interference accusations. Presumably, the Report incorporates such accusations to try to support the investigators' adverse-inference approach. The evidence, however, does not support (and at times contradicts) the Report's obstruction, interference, and lack of cooperation accusations. The attached index identifies specific evidence which contradicts these accusations. We include a few examples here to illustrate the point.

First, we reviewed hundreds of emails between the investigators and BSD employees, primarily Mr. Harrison. Each of the emails we reviewed from Mr. Harrison and other BSD employees was professional, helpful, and responsive. Where BSD and the investigators disagreed, however, no matter how professionally BSD expressed its disagreement, the investigators deemed the questions they raised as obstruction and interference.

Second, from the start, BSD understood that it would work with WIAA to define the investigation's scope. The investigators' claim that WIAA told them to look "under rocks, under rocks," might accurately describe a conversation or email between WIAA and the investigators. The investigators' claim that BSD attempted to narrow the investigation's scope, and consequently interfered with the investigation, gets the order wrong, however. We think it is clear that BSD's acceptance of WIAA's recommendation that BSD request an investigation was based on the Seattle Times's "Diploma Mill" article from August 22, 2015. That article covers the same five general areas that John Harrison thought the investigation would cover. Compare Report, Ex. 1 with id. Ex. 3. While it appears that the newspaper article's subject matter drove BSD's request that WIAA investigate, it also appears that WIAA simply disregarded BSD's original scope request.

Both evidence and common sense, then, support the conclusion that the investigation was supposed to cover specific areas of concern and not become essentially boundless. The Report nowhere addresses BSD's and WIAA's original understanding about the investigation's scope, which is both important and relevant to the investigation's and the Report's legitimacy and helpfulness. Further, at least acknowledging that a genuine misunderstanding existed about initial impressions of the investigation's scope may have prevented accusations that BSD was trying to narrow the investigation's scope. Such an acknowledgment, however, would have cut against the investigators' preferred theme that BSD interfered with the investigation.

III. Review of KingCo Principal Executive Board Decision

We were pleased to attend the KPEB hearing on June 16, 2016, to explain BSD's concerns with the WIAA investigators' process and its disagreement with the KingCo Self-Report Committee's findings and sanctions from June 7, 2016. We are disappointed, though, with the KPEB decision's (Decision) reasoning and outcome. Initially, we were pleased that the KPEB asked many questions
